He has operated a store in Washington for the last five years, and has served as mayor of Washington for the past two years.

Other than the mayorship of Washington, Mr. Delony has never held, nor asked, for any public office. Dramatizing the Unsolved Mystery of the Kidnaping of Five-Year-Old James Cash

The Boy The 'Snatch' The Demand The Pay-Off The Search The Area

On the night of May 28, Jimmy Cash, sketched above, was just the happy, five-year-old son of James Bailey Cash of Princeton, Fla. His mother put him to bed, and stepped across to a neighbor's for a moment. They—

A shadowy figure approached a rear door of the Cash home, slit a hole in a screen door, opened the locked catch, and entered. He lifted Jimmy from his bed and quickly stole away. When Mrs. Cash returned and saw the empty bed, she ran frantically from neighbor to neighbor, crying: "Have you seen Skeegie (the boy's nickname)?" No one had. He had been kidnaped.

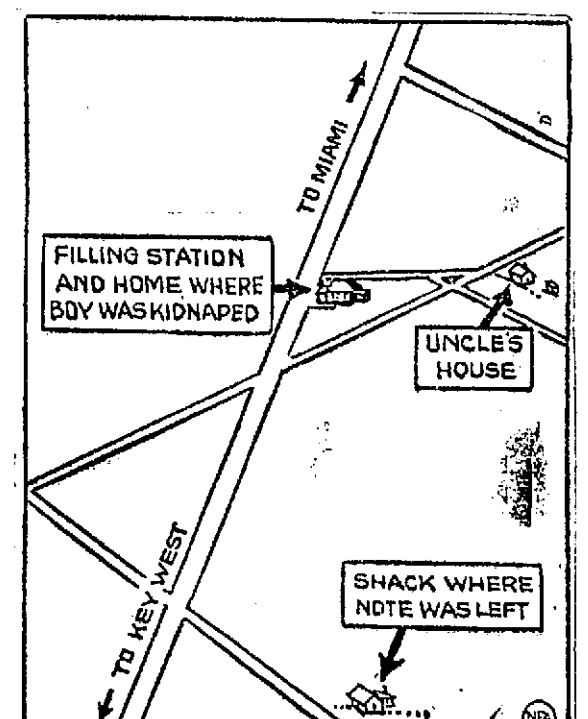

Three notes were found. The first was pinned to the door of the home of the boy's uncle, Wilson P. Cash. The second was given to a Negro to deliver. The third was slipped under the Cash door by a man who smashed a window and fled.

Three days after the kidnaping came a ray of hope. Following ransom note instructions, Cash raised $10,000, packed it in a shoe-box and drove out a lonely road at night. At an arranged spot, waiting autos blinked their headlights, and Cash tossed the money to the roadside. He returned home to wait for promised word from the kidnapers at noon. It did not come.

Convinced that the boy was dead, posses quickly organized for an inch-by-inch search of the dangerous Everglades country that surrounds the little town. While naval planes soared overhead, scrutinizing possible hiding places, divers sank into abandoned rock pits and coastal pools. A thousand frantic men, aided by Seminole Indians familiar with the ground, combed the undergrowth in vain.

Center of the tiny town of Princeton, 25 miles southwest of Miami, is the Cash store and gas station. The map shows where the ransom notes were found, at the Cash home, the boy's uncle's house, and the shack occupied by the Negro who was offered $5 to deliver the note to Cash. Although scores of G-men joined the hunt, and solved the crime.

An Extra Dash of Dash

THERE'S a certain valuable and undeveloped side to the average citizen that sorely needs letting out a little here and there, and a teacher at the University of California put his finger on it the other day.

Scratch a clerk, a bank president, a saleslady, and you find a suppressed Barrymore—John or Ethel. The impulse to stalk and gesture from time to time lies crouching timidly in almost everybody, and nobody has thought of a good reason yet why it should spend its life crouching.

Leon Connell, dramatic instructor at the California university, knows a good reason why that crouching impulse ought to stand up and be a man. Skillful employment of the dramatic instinct, he finds, makes for success in all the enterprises of daily life.

In the ordinary walks of life the American scene needs more grandiose entrances and sweeping gestures, anyway.

And—Anyway No. 2—there's this to think of. Theatrics in the field of politics is effective simply because people aren't accustomed to it—it overwhelms them. Make it a part of every man's existence, and the spellbinders will finally have to turn to common sense or give up.

En Garde, Kind Of

THE little incident of France's dueling dramatists came out of Europe like the warble of a slightly touched lark rising above the noise of war.

How heartening to be reminded that though most of the news from the continent these days concerns man in the mass and figures in the red, the French are still being French, and offense to the honor of an artist can still lead to crossed blades at dawn!

Well, not at dawn, exactly. The duelists, Messieurs Bourdet and Bernstein, both overslept and didn't make the field of honor till noon. Mr. Bourdet fought in a black Hom-burg hat, M. Bernstein in a gray fedora. The slaughter was stopped when M. Bernstein pinked M. Bourdet in the arm.

All in all, it was a pretty sad affair, as old-fashioned cutting matches go. But as a modern duel between two middle-aged Frenchmen, it was perfect.

The American scene would be considerably brightened if the native authors and artists and musicians engaged such means of settling their differences. Our one-punch battle in a night club is drab by comparison. Duels are much funnier.

Little Threat

LIFE without the legitimate theater would be dull for more reasons than one.

The group of Broadway producers petitioning WPA in protest against the competition of the Federal Theater Project merits sympathy, but at the same time it can't be helped if an occasional snort of amusement breaks out.

The Federal Theater, according to the complaining producers, agreed to keep out of the Times Square district. Project spokesmen say the agreement was simply to limit activities to one theater in that zone. Anyway, it seems that out-of-work thespians and their shoestring productions are grabbing the bread out of the moneyed producers' mouths.

The Federal Theater groups throughout the country are to all intents and purposes little theater groups. The mind goes back to the day when the little theater group was first raising its head. The professional theater wasn't much worried; on the contrary, it was pretty derisive. Now a town of any size without a little theater is something of a rarity.

You can't blame the moneyed boys for protesting the invasion of their territory by a Federal little theater. After all, Broadway hasn't invaded much of the little theater's territory—the rest of the country.

Surgery Knows a Lot of Ways to Patch Femur Fractures

The femur is the great bone in the hip and thigh of the human being. It is one of the strongest bones in the human body.

Nevertheless, as we grow old, there are sometimes falls or accidents which result in a fracture or breaking of this bone. In the aged, particularly, this is a most serious matter.

For almost 50 years the specialists in surgery and in orthopedic surgery have been concerned themselves with working out suitable methods of treatment for this injury. The results of their labors have introduced some ingenious, well-nigh unique, methods into the practice of medicine.

One of the operations is called a bone graft. In that operation the tissues are opened, the ends of the two parts which will not unite are freshened, and then a graft is inserted up the side of the bone. This graft is material which is taken from the bones of the lower half of the leg. The graft completed, the leg is put into a cast and held until the tissues have healed.

In another operation the broken parts are fitted together as a carpenter would fit together the parts of a box, dovetailing one fragment into the other.

In a third operation a new head is made for that part of the bone which forms the pelvis. This new head fits into the socket.

There are several modifications of all of these operations. In many new procedures involving fractures it is customary to use pins or nails, which are put into the tissues to hold the broken parts in place until suitable healing has occurred.

The particular branch of surgery known as orthopedic surgery has come to be one of the most interesting in medicine. It involves particularly a study of mechanics. These specialists concern themselves not only with broken bones but also with inflammations of the joints; with paralysis such as occurs after infection with meningitis or infantile paralysis; with flat feet; with the posture of the human being; and, in fact, with everything that concerns the mechanics of the human body.

By their work the orthopedic specialists have done much to free human beings from pain and suffering. They have repaired the crippled and made it possible for them to live normal lives.

3 tablespoons Spry
2 teaspoons salt
1 tablespoon sugar
1/2 cup boiling water

The banker, for one reason and another, decides to put the town back on its feet. To do so he floats a loan for a certain Balkan country, and as a

JOE MURRAY—like new places, new jobs, new girls.
HELEN—fell in love—hard—once.
TERRY MALLOW—found love—and kept it.

Yesterday, Terry comes into Joe's life, tells him she loves him, that he must not leave. Yet Joe cannot forget Helen, recalls one night with anguish that he really killed her!

CHAPTER X

MRS. MURRAY put down the iron and came over to Joe's chair and put her hand on his head, drawing it against her side and holding it there. He was stiff and unbending, but she did not mind. She stood there, holding him. They were silent, mother and son, but there was a current flowing through them, one to the other, a strong current. It could stand up and buck the tides of death and disaster.

"Life goes on, Joe," she said. "It's got to go on."

"Yes," he said. "I don't know why."

"It's not for us to say."

She went back to the ironing. She began to put up the work for tonight. After a moment she said: "What about Terry Mallow, Joe?"

"I don't know."

"I want you to be happy," she said. "You do whatever you think best. But don't let yourself be forced into anything that's not to your own unmistakable liking. You're a man now, and you've got to be strong."

And with that enigmatic advice the conversation ended.

About Terry Mallow, as Joe insisted . . . he did not know! What would be the square thing, the fair thing? He could not tell. His thoughts were halting, but clear enough in his mind. She had needed him, still needed him to some degree—but did she need him as much as she dreamed, and was she mistaking simple need for the blinding demands of love?

He did not know.

TERRY MALLOW herself knew all she cared to know. She was not drifting; she was working very determinedly around her objective, like a very busy lady spider weaving a myriad tenuous threads to hold it finally fast. No single thread was stronger than a puff of wind, but all together they were stronger than a hurricane.

"I'm so happy when you're around," she might complacently tell him. There were no maidenly reserves, no alternating boldness and shyness; it was as if she had never heard of them. "I feel safe," I never thought there could be such a comfortable feeling in here." She took his hand and placed it on her heart. "Feel it? It goes so good when we're together, and it skips and misses a little when you go away until you come back. Happy, darling?"

He smiled. "Of course."

Contentedly she sighed. "I'm glad. I never knew what it meant to be happy. I don't ever want to forget . . . ever."

And another tenuous thread would fasten itself upon him.

He knew well that she was merely a child. That, in his own way, he saw clearly with its implications. That she was desperate for escape from the bondage of her former life. That in her gentle, disarming way she was utterly unscrupulous about anything she wanted very badly. That in her oblivious innocence she had differentiated between Tommy Withers and himself only at his own arrogant insistence. What if he had never interfered? He asked her.

"But I could never love him like this, darling!" she said instantly. "He's not like you. You're a man, you're bigger in every way. He'd never have understood me the way you do. Nobody could manage me like you. He was only another boy. You knew lots of girls, didn't you, before you met me?"

And Joe thought: How child-like! And he thought: Childlike, my eye; it's cunning as a cat and looking at her, his patience expired, and he kissed the back of her neck, and she quivered with laughter and squirmed around and threw her arms around him tightly.

AND then, like as not, after an interval, a silent close interval, Joe would get abruptly to his feet out of her arms and say brusquely, "Come on. Let's get out of here. We'll go see a picture."

And obediently, with that curious blandly gay air, she would get her things and come along to see a picture. And she would behave herself pleasantly and decorously until he bade her goodnight the last thing, and then she would hold him tightly and make him kiss her long and hard, a little brutally and tenderly, darkly and hungrily, sending him off shaken and swearing to himself in the night.

It was Joe Murray who was weak, who Joe never been before, and who knew no way at all to understand it.

Terry was waiting for Joe late one afternoon on the street corner where he dropped off the street car returning from work. He was wearing old clothes, but clean, a flannel shirt; he had a lunch box under one arm. He looked at her waiting, apologetic and gently firm, big brown eyes full of news and determination.

"I've got to talk to you," she said. "Before you come to the house again."

"What's up?"

He led the way to a confectionery store, where he ordered sodas in a booth.

"There was another fight home," Terry told him.

"Told?"

"Me and the family."

Joe glanced at her throat and neck where her white skin ran down inside the dress, and her eyes dropped as she read that shame.

"They didn't hit me," she told him. "I stopped them. I scared them."

He grinned slowly. "Good for you, kid! How did you do it?"

Her eyes pleaded. "I said you would come there and raise hell if they hit me again. I said you would punch my father."

THE grin faded; thought went tickety-split in a dozen directions, exploring the consequences of that. "For Pete's sake, Terry! Me?"

"Who else darling? You're all I've got. And they're afraid of you. They're afraid you will clip my father on the jaw."

Joe snorted and stared and suddenly burst into laughter of pure delight. He felt like the knight in armor of the fairy tales, rescuing embattled princesses by fantastic clips on the jaw.

"What was the fight about?" he asked.

"You," she said blandly.

"Me?" He took a breath. "Go on, I can stand it."

It was a little difficult. But it came all at once. "They saw me kissing you goodnight and they said things. About you. About me. I just couldn't endure it any more and I told them to go take a dive off the sidewalk. I told them they didn't know Dewey got back from Manila yet. I told them a lot of things. I told them they weren't fit to be my father because you wouldn't stand for it."

He watched her shrewdly. "Is that all you told them?"

"No," she said in a low tone. "What else?"

She put out a scared, pleading hand. "I had to tell them, Joe. You don't know. I said we were going to be married. I had to say it or they'd have done worse things."

RAISING A FAMILY

By Olive Roberts Barton

Child, Like Adult, Is Quick to Act "Alibi Ike" Role.

The alibi child is familiar to most of us. He cannot be blamed too much at that. Look at yourself, mother, and examine your own temptations to find justification for your mistakes. Perhaps you only wish to soothe your conscience and convince Number One that when you forgot to invite Mrs. Brown to your party, it was no less than Mrs. Brown deserved.

Your cake falls, so the old stove cannot be depended on; the train moved out exactly half a minute before you reached the platform, so it was all due to the taxi driver who took his time.

It is human to err and as human to place the blame elsewhere.

And yet—there are people who always are on time. They start early. Women who never trust to luck and test their ovens and recipes first. People who systematic parties and seldom make social blunders. They don't need alibis or excuses. Of course they are sometimes very tiresome, these efficiency experts, and they make us feel most inadequate and shiftless, but just the same they are not hunting for someone or something to take their blame.

To make mistakes does not matter; to wiggle out of blunders by evasive excuses, does matter.

We have the classic example of the step-flying up and hitting our Betty or Bobby. "Bad step," we say, snatching it hard and kissing the bump on the tripper's head. This is the beginning of the Good Old Alibi. Any child with half an ear can tell that it is grand to hear us blame something besides his own haste.

It goes on. Jack forgot the butter. Well, that was Homer's fault for calling Jack over to see his rabbits. Jack was late for school. That was our fault (and maybe it was, too) for making him stop to eat his oatmeal when he had only five minutes before the bell. He didn't get up when we called him, but he forgets that.

Some things are a child's own fault, others not. But in any case he must learn to take the responsibility for his failures and not fix it on something else.

The one who adds the lie to his alibi is only a step ahead of his lessor. It is too easy to learn. Fear promotes such fabrications. The child who knows he can own up to an error frankly and bravely, and be fairly well understood, won't need many alibis or excuses.

Try, if possible, to have each child come out with the facts and stand by his mistakes, avoidable or otherwise. He will be ten times finer than the dissembler, who lives under the borrowed flag of innocence.

Taylor Skeptical About the Effect of All the He-Man Ballyhoo

HOLLYWOOD.—Robert Taylor is frankly worried about all this He-Man ballyhoo which has been designed to squelch the stigma, if any, of his roles as a professional pretty-boy.

In the current "Give and Take" he has three ring battle, and is known as Killer McCoy. Next, with Wallace Beery, he will engage in a piece of mayhem called "Stand Up and Fight." Several other yarns involving violence have been earmarked for him in the future. There are tales of how Taylor, in training and on the set, has been battling his sparring partners clear out into left field.

Definitely No "Orchid Man"

It may be that all these things constitute over-emphasis on virility and thus amount to a tacit admission that Mr. Taylor used to be something of an orchid. If the comparison is so interpreted, the implication is damaging and untrue. Besides, a large proportion of the fans have indicated, by writing that they were quite satisfied to see Mr. Taylor tussling with the gentler passions.

Taylor wants tougher roles than he used to play, but he was reluctant to appear as a light-heavyweight champion in "Give and Take." He was afraid he wouldn't be good enough; that fight-wise movie customers, seeing him in the ring would jeer him as a pugilistic ham.

The actor sprained his right thumb the other day, but worked several hours without complaining until the swelling almost was noticeable through the boxing glove. Also he has a bad cut under his left eyebrow. For some reason this is not a gash at all, but a reason the studio has chosen to say clever bit of make-up supplementing other synthetic bruises and abrasions.

Frank Morgan as "Killer" Pa
Frank Morgan plays Taylor's father in this picture, and he has contributed some hilarious scenes. There was one in Killer McCoy's dressing room, with the father trying to help tape the bribery and issue a false stock prospectus; and for these crimes he ultimately goes to prison. But good comes out of his chicanery: the town does revive, some thousands of people get a new lease on life, and in the end products of bribery and fraud are all to the good.

It makes a smooth, interesting story. Its defect is that Mr. Shute blithely dodges the real issue. He poses one of the great problems of modern capitalist society—and resorts to a moving picture solution.

However, he did produce a best-seller.

Morgan's unscheduled routine with long strips of adhesive tape, a pair of scissors and a bottle of collodion ended in a sticky mess that had the crew and visitors in hysterics. Taylor and Lionel Stander, his trainer, were so convulsed that they couldn't begin to speak their lines. The scene was cut short.

In another sequence, Morgan is being kidnapped. He entertains his captors, and finally escapes, with tricks of sleight-of-hand. Rehearsing went through an elaborate rignarole of shuffling and patter, had the two kidnapers look at a card each, then threw the deck into the air and caught a couple as they fell.

"Is this your card?" Morgan demanded of one of the men. He said no. "Is this your card?" he asked the other, and the fellow said yes, it was.

Now They Don't Speak

Here's a good one: "I wish that my husband wasn't such an easy mark for the women," said a wife of a hubby who was always doing something for someone else.

"You've no kick coming," retorted a neighbor, "because if he hadn't been easy, you never would have caught him."

Now those two neighbor women don't speak to each other.—The Cuntway News.

Weekly Sunday School Lesson

FACING THE SUPREME TEST

Text: Mark 14:32-46

The title of this lesson, "Facing the Supreme Test," is appropriate to the tragic incidents which it describes. The supreme test of service is indeed what friends will do in the hour of real trial and trouble. Will they stand by one, or will they do so only so far, failing and dropping out as the test becomes more acute? We speak often of "fair weather friends"—that is, the people who are with us when it is fair and sunny, but who desert us when the cloudy and stormy days come.

The disciples of Jesus, who failed Him in His dark hour in Gethsemane, were not fair weather friends. As a matter of fact, they had left all to follow Jesus. They had endured privations and made many sacrifices because of their loyalty to Him. Their fault was not in their lack of good intention, but in their weakness.

They were human. They could not stand the test of that last and experience. It may have been that they were partly overwhelmed because of their very love for the Master and of the intensity of His prayer which have made them apprehensive. Possibly it was just sheer fatigue. For they were worn out. And when Jesus came from the innermost part of the garden, He found their weakness. Though He realized their weakness, there was a tender reproachfulness in His words to Simon Peter, "Couldst thou not watch one hour?"

It was significant, too, that He bade them to watch and pray lest they should enter into temptation. He reminded them that the spirit is indeed willing, but the flesh is weak. Again Jesus went on into the garden and prayed with the same earnestness. Again He returned and found them sleeping, and the third time also. The disciples had failed Him, for before there was time for recovery, Judas appeared with the multitude and betrayed His Master.

It is easy, as we read such passages of Scripture, to blame the disciples—but would we have done better if we had been there? Would our loyalty have dispelled our weariness? Would our wills have strengthened us and nerved us for the test?

It is with such questions that we should read and study such lessons as this; for it is with such searching and with a realization of our own weakness, and the need of prayer and the strengthening of our wills through divine grace and help, that we become more like our Master and are able to bear the burdens of life as He bore them.

Blessed is the man who in his hour of Gethsemane has true and trusted friends who will stand by him without wearying or weakening!

And blessed is the man who has it in him to stand by a friend with unflinching courage and firmness! James and John had said, "We are able," but they had overestimated their own strength.

Campaign Closes

The present campaign has been marked by several public meetings and a tour of all principal points in the county where the removal question was discussed by both advocates for removal and opponents against removal. The opposition has been led by A. N. Stroud, Washington landowner. Senator John L. Wilson of Hope is chairman of the removal committee.

Advocates for removal have brought out the following points:

1. That an adequate courthouse will probably cost $150,000.
2. That the federal government will aid the project in one of two ways—either advancing the entire cost of the project and being repaid in 50 years without interest; or, granting 45 per cent of the cost, the county paying the 55 per cent balance with 4 per cent interest in 20 to 25 years.
3. The first plan would require half-mill tax; the second plan, a one-mill tax.
4. Hempstead's assessed valuation is $5,680,000—and a one-mill tax would yield $5,680. The immediate Hope area pays the heaviest county tax, and would pay the largest share of the cost of a new courthouse.
5. In an emergency, due to the state relieving the county governments of several thousand dollars' annual expense, it is possible a new building could be erected without any tax increase whatever.
6. The present Washington courthouse constructed in 1874, is dangerous—the truss supporting the roof started to collapse above the late Circuit Judge James H. McCollum, and the damage was temporarily repaired with a rod through the building above the courtroom ceiling.
7. In order to obtain removal of court site Hope must poll approximately 1,000 affirmative votes—a clear majority of the approximately 3,200 qualified voters. The voter who stays away from the polls June 11 automatically votes against Hope.

8. That the City of Hope has deeded the old Garland school property, about four blocks from the heart of the business section, to the county government without cost as the site of a proposed courthouse.

9. That the present 64-year-old courthouse has served its day, has no modern conveniences, and the courthouse and jail is badly in need of repairs and that a considerable amount of money is needed for repair work in the near future.

Opponents of the removal question have advocated that the present building is safe, that a new one would place a burden of taxation upon the people, that the government would not assist in building a new courthouse.

The question before the voters Saturday, despite arguments on both sides, is whether the courthouse site will remain at Washington or come to Hope.

Expresses Thanks

The Courthouse Removal Committee Friday expressed appreciation to the Hope Boys band, speakers and other citizens who have taken a part in the removal campaign.

The committee urged a big vote in the election and issued the following statement:

"Today ends a very heated campaign to remove the county seat from Washington to Hope. All the arguments of both sides, have been heard, and Saturday the voters go to the polls and render their decision."

"Reports from every section of the county indicate that removal will carry by more than 2,000 votes, which should settle a question that has disturbed the peace and harmony of Hempstead county for many years."

"The entire committee wishes to thank all men and women who have given so freely of their time and money to make the campaign a success."

"We wish also to thank the Hope High School band for their help in making the county tour, and all those who furnished automobiles."

"We urge all workers to be active Saturday in getting out the vote. Get every voter possible to go to the polls. Don't stop until every vote is cast and success is certain."

STORIES IN STAMPS

Why the Swedes Came To the New World

NO dazzling dream of exploration stirred the average Swede in 1638. He was perfectly contented at home. There was no religious persecution, taxes were not high, there was no social oppression, no overcrowding of population.
Then came Peter Minuit, Dutch soldier of fortune who had served as general manager of the Dutch New Amsterdam, or New York. Minuit brought tall tales to Sweden and the promise of great riches in furs and probably gold. But even then the first immigrants had to be drafted, many of them as a punishment for being in disfavor with the government. There were Finns who had run afoul of the poaching law and army deserters and debtors, altogether not a promising band of colonists.
But promising or not they set sail from Sweden in Minuit's two ships, the Kalmar Nyckel and the Fogel Grip, and more than four and a half months later, moved slowly up the Delaware, a weary group of 150. They landed, on what is the present site of Wilmington, Del., April 8, 1638, erected a fort on Christina creek, and promptly named the country New Sweden. The ship Kalmar Nyckel is shown here on one of five Swedish stamps issued to commemorate the 300th anniversary of this historic settlement in America.

Knoxville Spoils Pennant Raising Program for Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—The Knoxville Smokies spoiled the pennant raising program of the Little Rock Travelers here Thursday night with a 5-4 victory over the 1937 champions as Southern Association President Trammel Scott and an estimated 3500 persons looked on.

The Travelers blew a three run lead in the ninth when the Smokies blasted Jose Gonzales from the box. Richmond dual Jordan signed. Sands doubled to score Richmond. Jordan came in on Caldwell's infield out and Sands scored on Van Roby's ground-er.

In the 13th Sands bunted safely, stole second and scored on Van Roby's single.

Evans held the Lookouts to seven hits and except for the sixth frame, when a walk, triple and single produced the visitors' two runs, was never in serious trouble.

The Moth Problem
"Worm, sunshiny spring days have an entirely different effect upon moths and human beings. We mortals just want to lie out in the shade and do nothing, while the clothes moth gets very ambitious to go out and populate the whole world with her offspring. She settles them in nice homes too, so that they won't have to be rehabilitated later. Our nice woolen clothes, furs, rugs, and upholstered furniture are good homes for them." stration agent is warning Hempstead county homemakers.

There are two ways to prevent Mrs. Moth from "squatting" on your property, according to Miss Eue Marshall, extension specialist in clothing and household arts, University of Arkansas College of Agriculture. First, inclose it in a tight container so she can't get in, and second, run her out with gases that are poisonous to her.

The first method is perhaps easier. Any paper garment bag or wrapping cardboard closet or bag that can be sealed tightly will protect clothing, providing no moth eggs or larvae were in the garment when it was stored. Paper treated with cedar, tar, pine oil or printers' ink has no protective value, once moths get into the package, the specialist advises.

Clothing which has just been dry cleaned or washed before storing will remain safe if stored in sealed packages. Articles, such as fur pieces, can be thoroughly brushed and beaten to destroy eggs deposited on them.

Light woolen clothing worn during the summer can be protected by frequent brushing and sunning, as moth eggs are very fragile and moth larvae do not like hot sunshine. Miss Marshall suggests.

Clean garments will be much less likely to mildew or become faded and Gordon Stanley Cochrane is having the last laugh. When Miracle Mike included Gerald Walker in the six-player deal with the White Sox last winter, the only thing that saved his neck was all the counter-excitement over Harry Kipke's dismissal as Michigan's football coach about the same time.

When it looked like Don Ross was going to do a little better than replace Marvin Owen at third base, this crack by a Detroit fan was typical of the fire directed at Mickey Cochrane following the December meeting.

"What if he does make good?" asked the filbert. "He'll only wind up with Cousin Jimmy Dykes in Chicago."

But Vernon Kennedy was the bloke Cochrane wanted, and he has saved the transaction from a Detroit angle with eight consecutive victories. The Tigers would have gone into a complete nose dive without the Kanzen.

And Dixie Walker, while his arm lacks the strength of Joe DiMaggio's, is a saner player than Gee Walker, and is watching the Mississippian's base hits.

Amateur Champ Prefers Niblick
The sand wedge was invented the year Robert Tyre Jones wound up his regular golfing career.

Probably the lower scoring since 1930 is due to the knack which professionals like Picard Cooper, Revolta, Horton Smith, and McSpaden have with their bombers, but Johnny Goodman says that he never got the hang of one, and that he is not sorry.

The average American golfer would feel rather stripped without a sand wedge, but Goodman braved the course at Tron and the deep and yawning bunkers of St. Andrews with nothing more than an old-fashioned niblick to blast him out.

"I tried the wedge when it was introduced," asserted Goodman, before sailing, "but I couldn't lay 'em up as close as I can with a niblick, so I gave my bomber to a caddy."

"Perhaps the wedge has simplified golf, particularly for the duffer, but it's no pal of mine. In my opinion, it's a clumsy hacker's tool. It robbed me of the feel I wanted on bunker recoveries. It destroyed finesse."

Goodman mastered the niblick recovery as a kid. He would toss a bunch of balls into a trap beside the ninth green at the Omaha Field Club, and practice popping them out. He declares that it is much easier for him to control a niblick lob.

The Scots refused to adopt the bomber. They do not believe that it jibes with the spirit of golf.

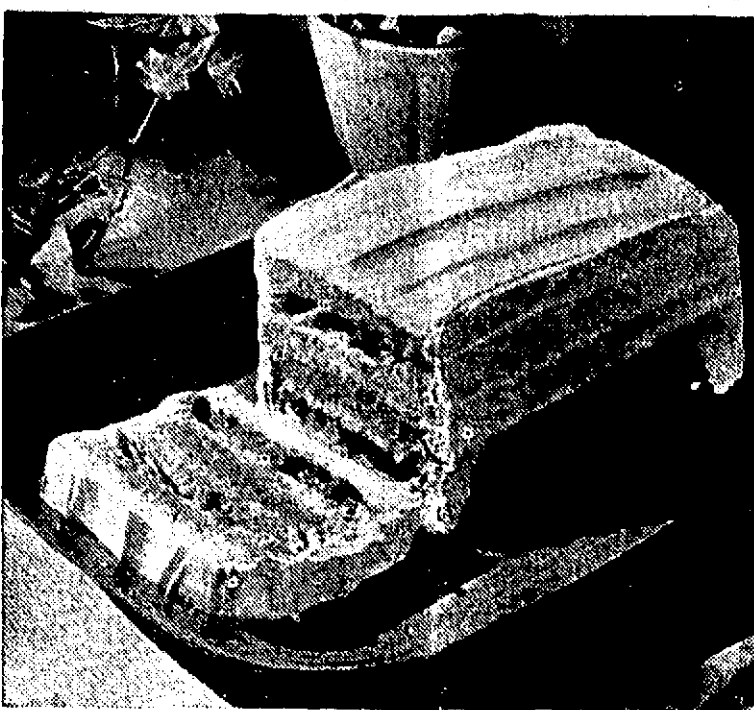

They look with contempt on the fellow who buys his shots across the stained when stored than if they are soiled when stored.

Storage protects clothing from dust, sunlight and moisture as well as from insect pests. Miss Marshall points out these things often cause as much damage to clothes as does the actual wear given them.

The second way to protect clothing from moths is by storing in a tight container and adding moth balls or paradichlorobenzene. At least a pound of one of these chemicals to every cubic foot of air tight chest or box is necessary to kill moths or larvae. Cedar lined closets or moth balls in pockets of garments are not sufficient to protect clothes, Miss Marshall said.

Salad-Sandwich Loaf Is Royal Fare!

If the hasty Earl of Sandwich, who is said to have invented sandwiches, because he refused to take time to eat an ordinary meal, could look upon the party sandwich of today he might well boast of his inventive genius.

A sandwich which is a whole party-meal in itself—and as lovely to look upon as the finest of birthday cakes—is the salad-sandwich, with all sorts of alluring delicacies in its various layers, the whole loaf frosted with "Philadelphia" Cream Cheese.

The finished loaf is a delight to the eye, and as the hostess cuts off individual sandwiches, just as she would cut a cake, the heribonned layers reveal a colorful and luscious assortment of fillings. Lettuce, tomatoes, Kay or pimento spread all lend their goodness to each individual sandwich.

Although the loaf, finished, is a veritable masterpiece, its preparation is actually simpler than the making of dozens of individual sandwiches.

Remove crusts from a loaf of day-old bread. Cut four lengthwise slices. Place a slice on a platter and spread it with Miracle Whip Salad Dressing, then cover with peeled sliced tomatoes. Spread another slice of bread with salad dressing and place with the dressing side on the tomatoes. Spread this slice with a generous layer of Kraft Kay or Pimento Cream Spread, and cover it with the third slice of bread. Spread this slice with dressing and cover it with crisp lettuce. Spread the fourth slice of bread with dressing and place on the lettuce.

Soften 2 packages of "Philadelphia" Cream Cheese with milk, and spread on the outside of the loaf. Garnish with parsley. Place the loaf in the refrigerator for an hour before serving.

"Airplane Fishing" to Be Protested

SANTA BARBARA, Calif.—(AP)—The county fishing industry plans an appeal to the state legislature to halt airplane fishing.

Santa Barbara fishermen charge that planes patrol waters off Ventura and Santa Barbara counties, dropping smoke bombs when they sight schools of fish. On that signal schooners along the coast—in communication by radio—converge on the school with mile-long nets making rich hauls.

Armstrong Doesn't Have to Be Puncher
Henry Armstrong, hurricane hammerer that he is, cannot be the murderous hitter his record makes him out.

No one will ever try to say that the Barney Ross he pelted the other night was the Barney Ross of two or more years ago. That was apparent as early as the fourth round. Still, Armstrong not only could not knock Barney out. He couldn't even knock him down.

But Armstrong is such a busy-body that he doesn't have to be a puncher to win a lot of fights and get a lot of money.

It's awfully hard for the other fellow to maneuver in a rain of gloves.

Toscanini Conducts in Four Languages

LONDON—(AP)—The British Broadcasting Company's orchestra, which will play a series of concerts under Toscanini's direction this summer, is getting ready to take orders in three different languages besides English.

Toscanini, it is said, when angry, invariably resorts to Italian. One of his most frequent expressions is "centure centure"—Italian for "sing, sing." He always uses the German "bitte" for "please," and instead of "good" he says the French "bon."

The controversy clouded prospects for an early adjournment of congress. Senator Barkley of Kentucky, Democratic Senate leader, predicted the legislators would go home "about Tuesday," but this forecast was contingent upon some wage-hour formula satisfactory to the Southern senators being worked out.

Boy Drowns in Muddy Fork Creek in Howard

NASHVILLE, Ark.—Calvin Rooks, 14-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. I. M. Rooks, of Nathan, 15 miles north of Nashville, was drowned in Muddy Fork creek near his home Wednesday afternoon while in swimming with three companions.

It was believed he crampd, as he went down in the water only once. His companions tried to have him and recovered the body shortly after he went down. Efforts to revive him were unsuccessful.

Funeral services were held at 1 p. m. Thursday at Biggs Chapel, conducted by the Rev. J. D. Copeland. Besides his parents he is survived by three brothers, Roland, Emory and Talmadge Rooks, all of Nathan, three sisters, Mrs. Theodora Reed, of DeQueen, Mrs. Audrey Brewer, of Nashville, Miss Ora Rooks of Nathan.

Baugh Will Pitch

COLUMBUS—Because he insisted on a special clause in his contract with the St. Louis Cardinals, Sammy Baugh will be released from baseball in time to participate in this year's All-Star football game August 31 in Chicago.

"I helped beat the Green Bay Packers last year," explains Sammy, "but now, as a member of the Washington Redskins, I want to be on the other side of the fence and try to beat the college boys. I think I'm going to enjoy it."
